

Royal Buddies

By MMCPU Communications

The MMCPU High School students went down to the Marcus Elementary to spend time with their little Royal Buddies. The project for this month was a service project that they got to work on together. One of the classes decorated brown paper bags to donate to the Ronald McDonald House in Sioux City to use as a snack sack. Another one of the classes went to the local nursing home and read to the elderly. This was such a good experience for the high school students along with the elementary students getting to hang out with their role models. Tori Treinen said, "It forms connections with the younger students and gives us and them something to look forward to."

They got to spend the day outside which many said was great, although it was kind of hot it was still a beautiful day to spend outdoors. Next week high school students will get the chance to help out in different areas, buildings, and outside for their service day projects.

Sticky Note Shoutouts

By MMCPU Communications

Sticky notes and shoutouts are a huge thing at the MMCPU High School. Many students write notes with encouragement on sticky notes or notecards and tape them up in other students' lockers. We call them "shoutouts." They are a great way to brighten someone's day and make them feel loved. One teacher at the high school even has students write them in class and deliver them to lockers on Wednesdays!

the scholarship, students must recruit donors, act as the chairperson for the blood drive, and register 25 donors ($250 awarded) or 40 donors ($500 awarded). Learn more about LifeServe's scholarship oppor-
